

ALBERTA DENTAL FEE GUIDE

On August 17, 2017, Dr. Mintoo Basahti, the President of the Alberta Dental Association and College, held a press conference where he announced a new dental fee guide for Alberta.

Although fee guides are traditionally published annually in most provinces, Alberta had been without one since 1997. The fee guide was abolished on the assumption that allowing dentists to set their own prices would increase competition and lower prices for consumers.

However, as a provincial government review of dental fees conducted in 2016 confirmed, Albertans have instead been subject to much higher dental costs than patients in the rest of Canada. The results of the report are striking: based on 49 representative dental procedures, dental fees in the Alberta private market can be as much as 44 per cent higher than in neighbouring provinces.

The absence of a fee guide has also driven the insurance industry to develop their own basis for reimbursing dental claims in Alberta, generally based on the level of historical claims, and what fees have been charged recently.

Most stakeholders now agree that the status quo is untenable. Indeed, Mercer has long advocated that the Alberta Dental Association and College resume publication of a dental fee guide, to help return dental costs to more sustainable levels.

WHAT'S NEXT

The new fee guide is a positive first step – but there is much more work to be done.

- A Unilateral Action: The publication of a new fee guide has been a stated policy goal of the Alberta government since they announced their intention to do so in December 2016. However, the publication of this new fee guide by the Alberta Dental Association and College seems to have caught the Ministry of Health off-guard, and the Minister of Health is unhappy with the guide as it stands.
- Fees Out-Of-Step: The fees published in the guide are still significantly higher than those in neighbouring provinces. The Minister of Health has publicly suggested that the dental association must do more work to ensure that dental fees match neighbouring provinces' fees more closely, and this sentiment has been echoed by, among other public stakeholders, the editorial board of the Edmonton Journal.
- An Uncertain Future: The conflict between the Minister of Health and the Alberta Dental Association and College has created an uncertain environment for insurers. Discussions are scheduled to resume next week between the government and the association on how much the fees should be reduced in the guide – how much, if any, will the fee guide change in response to the Minister's reaction is yet to be determined. Will dental providers used to higher prices follow the fee guide, which has no enforcement mechanism?
- While most insurers are in the process of reviewing the new fee guide, Alberta Blue Cross – the largest payer of dental services in Alberta – gave a hint as to the industry's sentiment in a statement on August 17th. Alberta Blue Cross pressed for further consultations with industry, as well as a number of specific reforms: implementing restorative controls, mandating more open pricing, and separating the role of the regulatory body that oversees the practice of dentistry in the province from the association that represents the profession. This final reform is also advocated by the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, which has been working with the Alberta government on implementing dental fee reforms since 2015.

THE WAY FORWARD

There are many unanswered questions: what insurers will do, how closely dentists will adhere to the new guidelines, and will the provincial government and Alberta Dental Association and College come to a compromise position?

Once insurers reach a position, plan sponsors can begin to review their options on how best to proceed.

In the meantime, plan sponsors can:

- Review their dental plan contract to confirm how “fee guide” is currently defined, and gauge whether or not they need to amend their plan documents
- Watch for information from their insurers
- Consider impact on their employees: Adopting the new fee guide may result in lower dental claim reimbursements from insurers and more out-of-pocket costs for employees
 - Employers with unionized workforces must review their collective agreements to see if there is any language that will prevent implementing the new guide
- Consider how to communicate this change to their workforce

Contact your Mercer consultant today to discuss what this means for your organization.

ABOUT MERCER

At Mercer, we make a difference in the lives of more than 110 million people every day by advancing their health, wealth, and careers. We're in the business of creating more secure and rewarding futures for our clients and their employees – whether we're designing affordable health plans, assuring income for retirement or aligning workers with workforce needs. Using analysis and insights as catalysts for change, we anticipate and understand the individual impact of business decisions, now and in the future. We see people's current and future needs through a lens of innovation, and our holistic view, specialized expertise, and deep analytical rigour underpin each and every idea and solution we offer. For more than 70 years, we've turned our insights into actions, enabling people around the globe to live, work, and retire well. At Mercer, we say we Make Tomorrow, Today.

For further information, please visit:

www.mercer.ca

Join the conversation:

On Twitter: @MercerCanada

On LinkedIn: www.linkedin.com/company/mercer-canada